IX. Governments & Countries

Why introduce the practices of the International Peace Trees Program at a country-wide level?

Given the local, national, and international challenges for the future of the younger generations and the planet, introducing the International Peace Trees and SDGs Program nationally can involve both children and young people, and all citizens to acting with governments towards a shared, inspiring vision at a country-wide level.

The 5 practices of excellence of the International Peace Trees Program allow all the cities of a country to gather around children and youth to co-build together their future and that of the planet towards the achievement of the 17 SDGs in the framework of the Agenda 2030 and the Agenda 21.

Presently experienced in several countries, the International Transcultural Program, developed by the International Research Center of our NGO, allows a responsible and entrepreneurial citizen mobilization in the cooperation towards the achievement of the 17 SDGs of the 2030 Agenda of the United Nations, united in action around a common future for their children and future generations.

Today's younger generation, who are the adults and leaders of 2030, urgently need the tools to help them to succeed in the world of tomorrow that will doubtless be extremely complex and with unparalleled challenges.

The Pragmatic Operational Process of the Peace Trees for the cities makes it possible to give the needed tools to the younger generations via the schools. This enables students to become able, from an early age, to manage their stress, remain stable and balanced, adapt themselves, innovate, seek, create solutions, and to undertake these aims in class projects for the betterment of others and the planet. Students learn from an early age to connect with their highest potential to materialize them in the physical world.

The Pragmatic Operational Process of the Peace Trees at a country level, developed by the International Research and Training Center of our NGO, helps cities and villages to become “Active Cities for Peace and SDG” with national and international recognition.

They provide effective support in all levels of application described in the different sections. The practices of excellence, integrated in the 5 keys of reconnection of the International Peace Trees Program are a relevant support for teachers & schools, universities & colleges, families, retirement homes & facilities for the elderly, refugee camps & prisons, artists & artisans, towns & villages, while also involving the corporate sector and businesses.

Its establishment around the inauguration of a Peace Tree allows:

1. A quality education, truly adapted to the needs, skills, and requirements of the world of tomorrow while remaining focused on peace, kindness, entrepreneurship, and achievement of the SDGs.
2. The whole population to connect with its forces of cooperation and inner wealth and express their full contribution for the mutual aid and the well-being of all and the planet on a country level.

The International Program’s practices of excellence allow organizations to:

1. Create warm, loving, attentive, and supportive relationships, conducive to creativity, and also a feeling of security, confidence, mutual aid, peace, and kindness at the country level.
2. Reveal the highest potential of the heart and the uppermost charisma of each and all.
3. Act together for the well-being of one-selves, others and the planet, making a positive difference in the lives of others and having a motivating and inspiring purpose and vision.

4. Live quality moments around children and young people. This goal is renewed during common international celebrations.
5. To stimulate economic development and job creation through the support of all educational communities in cities participating in the International Peace Trees Program. These communities offer the opportunity to the youth to elaborate and accomplish collective class actions in support of achieving the SDGs. This furthers cooperation, achievements, and the revealing of the highest potentials of all.
6. To express and realize the power of the talents, the unique place, and the inner wealth of each person in a country.
7. To provide support to countries and schools who are participating to the International Peace Trees Program. This involves the rehabilitation and financial support of schools in developing countries, along with access to water, tools and material allowing them to become self-sufficient.

The establishment of the Pragmatic Operational Peace Trees Process allows governments to:

- Follow precise indicators, at the city, region, and community level.
- Include the innovative actions carried out by the “Active Cities for Peace and SDGs” and, in particular, the contributions of the youth highlighted on a specific web platform in its annual national review presented to the United Nations High Level Political Forum for Sustainable Development (FPHN).
- Assess the country in relation to its approach for, around, and with the youth, the future adults of 2030.
